

Bogard

By Joe S.

We all know someone who likes to bogard. No one appreciates bogarding, especially when it is not yours to bogard. Please, do not bogard; this is extremely rude. We all know a bogard, and no one enjoys the company of a bogard. When one beholds a bogard bogarding, it is best for that individual to confront this bogarding bogard to belittle the boastful belligerent bogard. It is vital to understand that it is a very disrespectful act to bogard, and that to be a bogard is an extreme dishonor.

To bogard is to hog, or not to share. For example, I give my friend my orange juice, and he gives it back empty. I expected him to have a gulp or two, but he decided to bogard and finish all of it. Generous enough to share my drink, I am left taken advantage of and disrespected. Another example, my friends and I are watching a movie at my house, and I am sitting next to my friend and his girlfriend on the couch. I go upstairs to get everybody movie snacks, and I come back down to the couple laying out comfortably, bogarding the couch with no room for me. I hold no appreciation for these acts of bogarding, as I imagine nobody would. For this reason I advocate that nobody bogard, especially when it is not your to bogard.

To be a bogard is to be a rude individual who commonly points out the flaws of others to distract himself from his own plentiful flaws. A bogard will make a loud entrance, calling attention. He judges everyone, including himself, but only shares the shallow flaws he sees in those around him. Isn't it ironic that to bogard is not to share, but if one shares this criticism, fueled by insecurity, then the person is a bogard? Ignoring the bogard frequently provokes him to grow louder and more rude, in desperate attempt to bogard the attention of his company. Instead of ignoring this bogard, I insist that one should confront him. The confrontation will most likely elicit an unpleasant defensive reaction, but the bogard should stop passing his reprehensible judgements. To be bogard, a very ignoble label, is an extreme dishonor.

There are many benefits of refraining from bogarding. Those who do not bogard are more likely to have others share with them. This is due to the fact that others will feel safer sharing with non-bogarders. People are inclined to trust those who do not bogard with their belonging, knowing that the person would not keep it for themselves. Those who refrain from bogarding will acquire more respect from their company, because to bogard is disrespectful, and respect is given to those who show it. To abstain from bogarding is very prosperous.

It is crucial to understand that there are many reasons not to be a bogard. People will distance themselves from a bogard in order to escape the discomfort and irritation that bogards bestow upon their company. To abstain from being a bogard will allow people to feel more welcome and comfortable, as well as talk more. It is just as essential to disregard bogards as it is to abstain from being one. There is no reason to acknowledge the blasphemy of these treacherous tyrants. Hoping they will have less themselves, bogards only want others to experience self doubt and insecurity.